Exercise 2: Read the passage, and then decide whether the statements that follow are True (T) or False (F).

Are you good at remembering names and numbers? If the answer is 'no', perhaps you need some help from Nelson Dellis. He was the winner of the USA Memory Championships in New York where he broke two American records. He was the fastest to remember a pack of playing cards – in sixty-three seconds. He also memorised the most numbers in five minutes – 248.

The most important part of Dellis's work is the training. 'Everybody who's in this competition trained their memory,' he said on the Today Show on NBC TV. 'I train every day ... I work out my body, but I also work out my brain.' British-born Dellis was first interested in brain training when his grandmother had memory problems, and he understood it was important for people to improve their memories.

However, Dellis doesn't think he's special or has got a 'photographic' memory. He thinks anybody can be a memory expert. People just need to learn about the brain and how images are important for memory.

If you want to memorise a word or number, you need to change it into a picture. Dellis gives the example of a shopping list. When you see the word 'milk', you need to see a picture of some milk in your head. It's a simple idea, but one that all memory experts use.

A. Decide whether the statements are True or False.

Teams The USA invented the Global Positioning System (GPS) in the 1970s. At first, it was a military project, but now anyone can use the system to find out their exact locations, and Steve tracks their movements. For GPS to work, your receiver (or smartphone) must be in contact with four or more satellites in space. Then it uses the data to calculate the exact time and position on Earth. However, it is not enough for survival situations (escaping the jungles or deserts) because you must know your direction (which way you are moving) and your speed (how fast you are moving). GPS provides this information by tracking your position over time. For modern explorers, a smartphone and GPS are as important as a compass, torch, and map. With the right applications, your smartphone will help you survive. In Steve Grant's new survival book, three people will face a sixteen-day jungle adventure.

A. Decide whether the statements are True or False.

One of my favourite websites is lyricstraining.com. It's great because you can learn English while you listen to your favourite songs. You choose a song and then listen to the song and complete the lyrics. You can also watch the video of the song.

The good points include the fact that there are lots of up-to-date groups you can listen to such as The Script or One Direction. In addition, you can choose the level: beginner, intermediate or expert, depending on your level of English. Another good feature is that you can repeat a line of the song as often as you want, until you know the missing word. Also, the website is very easy to search and you can listen to songs in different languages, for instance in Spanish, German and Italian.

Jamal Edwards is the boss of a music YouTube channel, and he even received an award from the Queen for his services to music. So, what's his story?

Jamal was born in England in 1990. At sixteen, with a video camera, he uploaded a video of foxes and received 1,000 visits! Soon he wanted to combine his love of filming with his passion for grime - a type of hip hop music.

Jamal began filming some grime artists when they were performing in the street and at concerts. After his posts, thousands of people watched and downloaded the videos.

In 2007 he created his own online TV station, SBTv. First, he added live concerts and interviews with musicians to grime music videos. Later, he started including different types of music to attract more viewers. The strategy worked, and today SBTv is very popular among young people.

Technology: GPS and survival

The USA invented the Global Positioning System (GPS) in the 1970s. At first, it was a military project, but now anyone can use the system to find out exactly their locations, and track their movements.

For GPS to work, your receiver (or smartphone) must be in contact with four or more satellites in space. Then it uses the data to calculate the exact time and position on Earth.

However, it is not enough for survival situations (escaping the jungles or deserts) because you must know your direction (which way you are moving) and your speed (how fast you are moving). GPS provides this information, by tracking your position over time.

For modern explorers, a smartphone and GPS are as important as a compass, torch and map. With the right applications, your smartphone will help you survive.
